"The Conjuring 2" received positive reviews from critics. The review aggregator website Rotten Tomatoes reports a 79% approval rating with an average rating of 6.3/10 based on 310 reviews; the website's critical consensus reads, "While not quite as creepy or terrifying as the original, "The Conjuring 2" still delivers plenty of scares thanks to solid performances and atmospheric visuals." Metacritic, which uses a weighted average, assigned the film a score of 65 out of 100 based on 33 critics, indicating "generally favorable reviews". J. R. Lindermuth, reviewing for "The Village Voice", stated, "Wan's horror master class doesn't push the envelope so much as push the borders of its genre outward, effortlessly, gracefully making horror history in the process." In contrast, Nev Pierce of "The Times" gave the film only two stars and said: "'The Conjuring 2' is a better acted and far more cerebral film than its predecessor. Yet it is still a very silly thing that takes itself far too seriously when it comes to narrative and characterization."

The soundtrack for this film was composed by Joseph Bishara. The film score was composed by Joseph Bishara.

The film takes inspiration from H. P. Lovecraft's short story "The Statement of Randolph Carter".
