Cited by 117 Now that allele frequencies have been estimated, it becomes possible to estimate disease associations, and the approaches can be relatively straightforward for common alleles that can be associated with large effects. It makes sense to consider SNPs that influence gene products, transcription factor proteins, and posttranslational products such as cell-surface receptors and cell-cycling kinase proteins. A more novel approach is to look at SNPs located near regulatory regions of the genome. A natural candidate for this is the so-called SNP-enhancer (SNP-E) 1.
