The synthesis of mature messenger RNA is controlled in part by the gradual de novo synthesis and degradation of this class of RNA. Previous studies have identified a pool of pre-RNA polymerase in extracts of wheat germ, HeLa cells, and Drosophila that can direct the synthesis of RNA in vitro. These experiments have indicated that pre-RNA polymerase is degraded in vivo during division. In the present experiments, pre-RNA polymerase was separated from a smaller pool of enzyme by sedimentation on sucrose gradients, and the ability of these fractions to direct the in vitro synthesis of RNA was examined. 3ef4e8ef8d
