ROM (CD1) MENU.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method of sharpening the cutting edge of an edge-trimming tool of the type having a casing, an edge receiving and securing part in the form of a holder on the outer surface of the casing, a blade and the edge of a blade sharpener receiving part on the blade, whereby during the sharpening operation, the sharpening tool is pressed against the blade by means of pressure means in the shape of a press head and, in the same instance, the operator receives the pressure of the sharpening tool against his/her fingers. 2. Description of the Prior Art A method of the above-mentioned kind has been known from German Patent DE-PS No. 3,830,373. The blade received in a holder of the edge-trimming tool is pressed against the sharpening tool by means of pressure means in the shape of a press head and then against a steel ruler, whereby the sharpening operation is performed with a sharpening disk attached to the sharpening tool. In this case, the application pressure to the blade during the sharpening is somewhat more or somewhat less than the application pressure to the steel ruler during the sharpening, which is also the case when sharpening with a steel ruler and a sharpening disk. The sharpening of the edge of the blade is performed with the edge of the sharpening disk by means of a grinding wheel. A further sharpening of a blade edge is known from U.S. Pat. No. 3,885,035. In this patent, a knife sharpener is used for the sharpening of a knife blade. In this known sharpening tool, the blade edge is pressed against a sharpening stone by means of a press head in order to perform a grinding of the blade edge by means of grinding disks. In this case, a
