I have a few VPS servers that run CentOS and I host web projects for myself. One of my VPS servers is currently not available and I had the idea to run some tests on it. I moved my site from the other server to the one that is currently down. Now I need to set a CNAME record from example.com to my site. I created a DNS record for example.com and made sure it points to my IP. Why do I need a DNS record for my domain when I already have multiple IPs? A: Your VPS has multiple IPs because it has more than one hostname or (maybe) because it's a virtualized VPS or because of some other reason. In either case, you will need to add the CNAME record to the DNS of the VPS, not to your own DNS. #pragma once #include struct ABIArg { union { struct { unsigned int64_t arg; }; uint8_t arg[0]; }; }; struct ABIReturn { union { struct { uint64_t rval; }; uint8_t rval[0]; }; }; struct ABIType { struct { uint64_t arg; uint8_t *parg; }; union { struct { uint64_t arg; uint8_t *parg; }; uint8_t rval[0]; }; }; class ABI { private: unsigned _count;
