Conventional wisdom has it that a work is the best measure of a workman. I beg to differ. Quality is the best test of quality, and there is no test of qualities. There is only one test of a work of art, and that is its effect on its audience. — C.S. Lewis, The Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe This easy-to-use application enables you to sort through all your stored videos and pick the ones that match your current mood or playlist. You can easily view the videos in your Queue, Downloadable, Unlisted and Favorites list. You can even get the video in your own preferred file format like MP3 or MP4 if you wish. The app can auto-rename the files and make them editable too, which makes it simple to manage them from your end. The Queue, Downloadable and Unlisted list can be sorted based on the date when they were added, time watched or modified by you and the videos can be removed easily after viewing them. You can browse the list items by using various search options like Date, Time Played, Title or Rating, which can be used for finding out when you added a particular video or the video that was played the most time, etc. The Favorites list can be

I have a code that handles movie file types that will be used as a background video in an app. I have an issue that some of my videos are being viewed in landscape mode, while others are being viewed in portrait mode. I am getting the videos from the web (using MPMoviePlayerController) and there isn't much I can do with the file size to limit the max width since it is downloaded to the device. Any suggestions as to what I might change in my code so that all of my videos are presented in the correct orientation? I am using iOS7 simulator. Here is a sample code, just to show the issue: NSURL *videoURL = [NSURL URL
