Here is a brief overview of the Photoshop _CS5_, _CS6_, and _CC_ editions of Photoshop and various other versions of Photoshop, as well as versions of Photoshop from other software companies. ## Understanding the Photoshop Backstory and Evolution Photoshop started out with two cofounders and became popular with its new feature set in 1990. It features layers, which were introduced in 1990 to implement a layer-based editing system. Layers, which are graphic images, can be moved, resized, and merged into each other as an image is edited. It was developed by Adobe's Charles Geschka (better known as Chuck) and his brother Scott Geschka, together with a member of Adobe's Lightroom team, Chris Heibel. Chuck brought in a third founder, Bruce MacLean, to help with the documentation side of the project and to lead the development of Photoshop's technical manual. MacLean's role was eliminated as the project gained popularity and life as a team effort. Many of Photoshop's features were developed from previous software projects, including MacPaint, and from other areas of Adobe's products, including the Lightroom team's own work. The team set out to create a new image editing solution that would combine the strengths of both MacPaint and the Lightroom team's work, while still addressing some of the user interface issues the Lightroom team had encountered in developing their own products. This team effort resulted in Adobe Photoshop. You can see a quick video of Chuck's story in Figure 7-1. Figure 7-1: Chuck Geschka showing off the Adobe Photoshop CS5 launch video. Photoshop was a welcome addition to the Macintosh line of computer software products. While Apple had its own image editing product for the Mac, it was poorly supported by the company and many new features were unavailable for users. In fact, some features were even missing from the Mac version of Photoshop. However, rather than meet Steve Jobs's demand for a large feature set, the Photoshop team opted to support the feature set they believed they were adding and wait to see what future version of Photoshop would bring. Photoshop became available for Macs in 1991. The Windows version was released one year later. Photoshop's success increased the prominence of the Mac team at Adobe, and Mac users became the primary target market for Photoshop. However, users of all types, including Windows users, used Photoshop. In 1999, a group of Adobe professionals

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS4?

I was recently at a conference at which someone described a good client-side application as "being like the difference between a baby and a fully-grown baby." So, I'd like to use the analogy of the difference between an Eels win and a Pauline Hanson moment. That is, winning the footy league, and losing miserably. The week before the Nationals played Hawthorn in front of a record crowd of 82,519 – of which (I swear) 20% came to my house – a question of what it means to be a Nationals supporter was put to me. Well, it doesn't – a kid can grow up and become a huge, rampant Australian, someone who's so passionate about their country and football that even the most astute Liberal and Socialist have to acknowledge the greatness of their intellect. But we don't do that. For example, I'm happy to say that I'm a "die-hard Anz fan", so I can't just walk out of my house and demand that my friends and family give me their opinion on whether we're doomed or not. So, instead, we get the Hanson moments – where the demographic that votes for the Hanson's has little sympathy for the fate of the Mighty Nz. Like today: On Sunday, Heath Evans did what no-one else dared to do. While other NzAFL players were running around on Sunday-morning sky like giddy schoolchildren at Easter, Heath Evans simply got his team-mates together, and headed out to Glenferrie. And when he was driving back to Oakleigh, and everyone else was complaining that they couldn't get a parking spot because of the NzAFL game, he turned to the radio and heard the score. And he stopped and walked back to the team, declaring that he and his team-mates were going to be on the footy field at 10:30am. The crowd of 84,000 responded with applause, and later we heard the sound of cheering throughout the club. We, as Nz-fiends, had turned up, despite the heat and the traffic. We had turned out for a show of solidarity. That's it – that's how it works. It's not up to me whether I turn up to footy – or whether I
