Legler's decision to keep his band off the field last Saturday was well-timed. Playing "Dixie" – a racist song written in 1863 by a white author about a Confederate victory over the Yankees at Chattanooga, Tennessee – was in bad taste after the recent deadly white nationalist rallies in Charlottesville, according to many observers. That's because the rally in particular was about the Confederacy as well as racism in general. "Dixie" was played as a celebration of the Confederacy and it was of course started with a chorus of "Dixie," sung in the same time and loud as the band's "Hail the Conquering Hero." The marching band was performing to celebrate the dedication of the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change at the university, and marching band director Mitch Miller decided the crowd included many people who did not share his views. "A lot of non-students were there," he said. "We had a couple of students from Texas Tech who were offended by it and asked that we stop." Legler agreed and at the last minute called off the show, with Miller apologizing for the tasteless lyrics. "As a representation of Texas Tech and Red Raider Nation, I apologize for the inappropriateness of some of our former marching band performances," Miller wrote on Twitter. "We are 100 percent committed to representing our university with the highest degree of integrity, and to always be a force for good.◆
