Lysophospholipase D2 (LYPD2) is a calcium-dependent enzyme that shows substrate preference for lysophospholipids (LPLs). Numerous studies have demonstrated the physiological involvement of LYPD2 in cell signaling and essential functions. However, the molecular function of LYPD2 and its mechanism remain largely unknown. Recently, it has been shown that LYPD2 functions as a modulator of intracellular phospholipase C signaling, particularly in the context of LPL activation. The relationship between LYPD2 expression and clinical outcomes in tumors, including glioma, lung cancer, and hepatocellular carcinoma has also been investigated. Furthermore, the potential as a therapeutic agent against cancer and multiple sclerosis has been suggested. In this review, we discuss the relationship between LYPD2 expression and clinical outcomes, as well as its involvement in various diseases.Q: The div is becoming resized in the browser When I resize my browser I can see my div at the bottom of the browser.
