I flew into the spire of a dark church one misty morning in winter and landed on the cathedral roof, feeling the sharp pain of my broken beak. I stood in the cold and squinted at the slanting ray of bright sunlight filtering through the many gaping holes left by the workmen's many axes, but I never blinked. I've been here a long time. A bird shouldn't have to freeze in winter. I'm not alive. My eyesight is fading. I can see barely at all now, but I'm strong. I'll not move, not for anything. I'm not alive. My heart, my lungs, are all that remains. The rest of my body is gone. No more a bird, no more a man, no more. I'm a head, a head. I won't move. But I'm not alive. My head crumples like an old, rickety chest of drawers. I fall to my knees. There's no one around. I'm alone. I'm a bird. A man's head. I'm not alive. Share this: Like this: LikeLoading...

there's no way to know whether that's because no one's ever come up with a solution before or because this solution was impossible to implement in the first place. I use a lot of old software and they all require a key to be set up. ShowKeyPlus only displays the key. If you want to set up keys, you need a separate program.
