Image editing in Photoshop is done through layers in a way analogous to many other graphics programs. The concept of layers is very basic and straightforward, but the way that layers are used to create and edit images provides a powerful way of manipulating images. A layer is a transparent image, usually a photo, that can contain other layers of images. A layer has attributes, such as shape, color, transparency, and size, just as an image does. A layer can contain any number of images, and when you create a layer, you can name it and give it attributes. (To create a layer, see the sidebar "Creating a new layer and naming it"). Then you can work with the layer by adding, moving, and deleting it. After you've created and named a new layer, you can also use filters to change the way that you view the images on that layer. (To add and change the attributes of a layer, see "Editing a layer's appearance," later in this chapter.) Photoshop has lots of predefined filters that you can use to make every image look like something different. Here are some of Photoshop's most popular filters and what they do to your photos: Camera Raw: Photoshop includes the Camera Raw plug-in, which is a great way to open your camera's raw files. Raw files are much like raw film; they don't have a developed, photographic image. As long as you use the right techniques, you can turn raw files into developed, printable images. See the sidebar "Opening camera raw files" for more information on this subject. Exposure: This filter changes the brightness of your photo. You can enhance the overall brightness of an image, change the shadows and highlights, or make the image look warmer or cooler by changing the color temperature of the image. Gradient: This filter allows you to change the tonal values of an image across the full span of the image. This is an especially great effect for making a photo look like it's made of a single color. Levels: This filter changes the overall brightness and contrast of an image, allowing you to make an image look brighter or darker. You can also change the hue of the image to desaturate or intensify color. Noise: The Noise filter can be used to create visual texture in your images, or you can create a softer, more blended version of the image. Other filters include Blur, Burn, Chroma Key, Dewarp, Emboss, Grad

The invention relates to heating devices, especially for domestic appliances. Such devices include a heat generator element in order to apply heat to an object to be heated (e.g., food in a food appliance) and a method for supplying heat from a heat generator element. Heating devices are known wherein a heating device is arranged in a heating chamber and wherein said heating device includes a heat generator element, such as a heating coil, which is mechanically fixed to a cross bar or an auxiliary component connected to the cross bar. These components are installed in the housing of the heat generator element and are mechanically connected to one another or, as the case may be, connected to a base component with a central positioning in such a manner that the heating coil is suspended within the heating chamber. With heating devices of this type, the heating chamber has a base and at least one cover part which, on the one hand, closes the base and, on the other hand, supports the heating coil, which is in the form of a heating coil plate, and the heat generator element, which is usually a so-called heating coil. These components can be connected to one another by elements such as screws, which are inserted through the connecting points or through connecting holes provided on the base or on the cover part. These connecting points also receive the heat generator element in order to fix it at the connecting points. The base and cover part are typically connected to one another by gluing and they may additionally be screwed together. For example, in order to connect the cover part to the base, screws may be provided which extend through bores provided in the base of the heating chamber and are subsequently anchored in holes in the cover part. An alternative possibility is to provide a retaining element, which encompasses the base and the cover part and which receives the connecting points via snap-in elements provided on the connecting points. DE 20 2004 014 597 U1 relates to an electrical heating device in which the cover part, which closes the base, is formed by a spring leaf. The spring leaf covers the base and is connected to the base of the heat generator element by means of a screw connection. The spring leaf includes a tab on the top side, which is opposite the spring surface, in order to receive a screw connection element. The screw connection element connects the base and the spring leaf. The electrical heating device is able to be used as a hob, in which case the cover part is preferably formed by the hob. In this case the cover part is connected to the

Zoo Atlanta Zoo Atlanta is an indoor zoological garden and wildlife park located in Atlanta, Georgia, United States. Owned and operated by the Georgia Aquarium, Zoo Atlanta opened in 1935 with the purpose of providing animals for the purposes of scientific research and education. Zoo Atlanta is the only non-marine-mammal facility and also one of only two zoos in the world that houses penguin and sea lion exhibits, the other one being in Shedd Aquarium, Chicago. The Zoo Atlanta is a member of the Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA) and the World Association of Zoos and Aquariums (WAZA). Facilities Exhibits Zoo Atlanta is open year-round except during the months of June and July, with the exception of Christmas and the month of February. The zoo is divided into two parts: the indoor animal area, and the outdoor open-air area. The indoor area is composed of over sixty exhibit areas, ranging in size from to. The overall size is . There are approximately 1,000 species of animals, representing approximately 50 different families. Species include mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians. A majority of Zoo Atlanta's animals are those that inhabit the American tropics and subtropics. All of the animals have been acquired by the Georgia Aquarium from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, private individuals, and other zoos and aquariums. Zoo Atlanta is the only non-marine mammal facility to house such species as an African penguin, a pygmy hippopotamus, an American alligator, a barn owl, a giant anteater, a western lowland gorilla, a western lowland tamarin, a western lowland tamarin, and a South American bush dog. Other animals that inhabit Zoo Atlanta's exhibits are: American bison, Baird's tapir, brocket deer, Brazilian tapir, capybara, Chacoan paca, common ground squirrel, Dall sheep, guanaco, Madagascar giant bullfrog, mara, pygmy hippo, Mexican agouti, pudu, a leopard cat, raccoon dog, red river hog, dwarf crocodile, three-toed sloth, tree shrew, and four species of turtles.
