Very few actors were good, none of the songs were all that great, and it had the worst ending ever. Phenotypic characterization of insulin-degrading enzyme in an adult case of type 1 diabetes mellitus. Type 1 diabetes mellitus (T1DM) is an autoimmune disorder with an incidence of 1-2 per 10000 in the United States. Studies have shown significant association between the occurrence of T1DM and insulin-degrading enzyme (IDE). In the current study, a new patient of T1DM in Saudi Arabia was phenotypically characterized using the parameters that define allelic classification of IDE. The DNA obtained from the patient was subjected to DNA sequencing and comparison with GenBank human IDE (gene ID: 3875) for diagnosis. The patient was diagnosed with T1DM and was treated with insulin. Subsequently, the patient developed a secondary complication characterized by Raynaud's phenomenon, recurrent cellulitis, and recurrent genital herpes with associated neuropathy. In the course of the genetic analysis, a point mutation was detected in the patient's IDE gene, changing methionine (M) to leucine (L) at position 170. This mutation was confirmed in her father and sister. In a phenotype-genotype correlation, the presence of M170L mutation in IDE can lead to the development of phenotypic characteristics observed in our patient. Joseph P. Hoose Joseph P.
