instructor will explore the origins of the study of music through the perspective of various composers and relate the study of music in the medieval period to the renaissance period. This class will explore, touch on, and, of course, analyze and discuss primary and secondary sources to better understand what it is like to study music in the renaissance. the performer and the audience as part of an artistic team. ballet is dance theater performance art that originated in the late 18th century and is danced primarily by women and men as soloists. In the ballet, dancers use their bodies to communicate emotions, express ideas, convey messages, and tell stories. Dancers perform in front of an audience, who will watch in a theater or concert hall. Ballet Ballet (also ballet) is a genre of dance that developed in the late 18th century in France and is danced primarily by women and men as soloists. The word ballet derives from the Italianballetto. Ballets come in several different types, including classical ballet, contemporary ballet, dance-theatre, and ballet folklórico. Ballet is also one of the oldest forms of theater. History Since the late 17th century, dance had become an integral part of the social activities of French aristocracy. An aristocratic social life consisted of balls, hunts, concerts, horse races, and theatre. Ballets, with dance from the common people added to the mix, became the most popular form of dance entertainment. They were typically composed by maîtres de ballet, some of whom were composers or were otherwise well known, including Lully, Rameau, Campra, Marais, Quinault, and Beauchamp. They were used to introduce the newest operas or comedies, or at the end of a performance to give an uplifting or playful feel. They may have been performed either on stage or in the audience. The court ballet was usually choreographed by a master of the court. The ballet de cour was considered highly respectable. Ballet de cour The royal court had its own ballets de cour, notably those choreographed by Louis XIV

Avoiding La Fille Mal Gardee through a Yoga Tune-Up

There are a lot of things you can do to prevent injury before it happens, but some precautions are just common sense. One thing that can be taken advantage of is the daily practice of yoga. Yoga is not just for the physically fit person; a yoga exercise regimen can help anyone cope with stress. There are different types of yoga, but for the purposes of this article we will focus on the vinyasa style. This style of yoga combines breath and movement to achieve a flow of yoga poses and poses flow into each other. Vinyasa, which means transition, is especially helpful in releasing stress and improving the body's flexibility. Yoga relaxes the body and mind. The result is a feeling of calmness and peace, along with improved concentration. By stretching the body, yoga reduces the amount of stress on the bones, muscles, ligaments and tendons, making it ideal for improving athletic performance. In fact, studies show that regular yoga practice can enhance athletic performance in the mind and body. As you continue to practice yoga, you should expect to see improvements in flexibility, range of motion, body alignment, breathing and posture. Yoga is a good way to avoid injury and get the body and mind ready for an upcoming performance. In addition to the benefits of improved fitness and range of motion, there is also an increased sense of calm and relaxation that is achieved when yoga is practiced. There are different forms of yoga that are practiced all over the world. This article focuses on the vinyasa style, which is most common in the United States.

and ballet related blogs. Q: How to get control of my own click event? I have an TextBox on my page and I set it's style to: style="position:absolute; top:0px; left:0px; z-index: 10;" When I click this TextBox, some thing triggers a click event:

$("#TextBox").bind('click', function () {
$('#Div1').text('TextBox_clicked'); });

The problem is that I want to be able to cancel this event but the cancel doesn't work properly. Here's a picture: You'll see that if I click on "X" button, the text gets set to "TextBox_clicked", but I still want to do what I want to. How can I do this? A: You should use `event.preventDefault()` to cancel the default action of the event.

$("#TextBox").bind('click', function (e) {
e.preventDefault();
$('#Div1').text('TextBox_clicked'); });

Also note that your TextBox is styled to be `position: absolute;` and probably also to be `display: block;` so it doesn't render in the flow of the HTML and the event can't bubble up to it. To position a CSS-styled element, use `position: absolute` with `left`, `top`, and `bottom` to place it where you want it.

.control { position:
absolute; top: 0px; left: 0px; z-index: 10;
