Q: Writing large amounts of different data types in json I'm building a webservice that writes a large amount of data from a database into different user defined classes. Currently I'm iterating the results from the query set and building the objects and the output can take ages (hundreds of seconds) as this is done for all the records. I'd like to convert the data from a sqlite3 database into json before it gets sent off. I've seen json.dumps is quite efficient and I can use a generator to deal with the data of different structures. Are there any pythonic ways of dealing with this situation? Is there a problem with me building multiple objects instead of one long serialized list? A: I solved my problem with returning a custom django view that serializes the data in the template and then returns it as JSON. Since this data doesn't need to go over the network, this was a very straightforward solution. The only thing I'd need to make it better is to go through the database fields and remove the fields that need not be sent. A case of Wegener's granulomatosis mimicking Crohn's disease in the surgical specimen. Wegener's granulomatosis (WG) and Crohn's disease (CD) are both characterized by a systemic inflammatory process. Although WG and CD have similar clinical manifestations, there are no specific signs or symptoms that can facilitate the differentiation between these two diseases. Only a limited number of cases of WG presenting in surgical specimens of ileocolonic Crohn's disease have been reported in the literature. In this paper, we describe a case of WG presenting as Crohn's-like disease with a transmural inflammatory bowel disease process. Regulation of cell growth and cyclic AMP-dependent protein kinase in a human colorectal carcinoma cell line (HCT-116) by transforming growth factor-alpha. Transforming growth factor-alpha (TGF-alpha) is a multifunctional growth factor that plays an important role in tumor promotion and progression. We have examined the effects of TGF-alpha on cell growth and the modulation of cyclic AMP-dependent protein kinase (PKA) in a well-characterized human colorectal carcinoma cell line, HCT-116. TGF-alpha is known to induce HCT-116 growth. However, in this

Raster brushes draw lines, and the type of brush you're using is determined by the type of line you're drawing. If you're drawing a line, you're using a straight or linear brush. All brushes are in the Tools palette, and you can drag and drop them onto a document or into an Adjustment Layer. Transform: The Transform tool allows you to easily and quickly resize, rotate, flip, and move any type of layer. You can also warp the contents of layers. The Transform tool is often used for animation purposes. The Liquify tools are used for smoothing and editing the appearance of layers without affecting the content of a layer. They are used to align an object. Effects: Effects are another way to add great looking layers or image effects. You can apply them using the Adjustment Layer. Applying effects to an image will make that layer look more like another image, such as one with a similar background. Grunge Brushes A Grunge Brush or Grassy Brush is a brush that looks like grass. They are great for creating grassy images or for combining multiple images in a background to create a dreamy image. Gradient Brushes Gradient Brushes are used for applying a change to an image or for creating great looking designs on an image. You can adjust the colors of the gradient and the direction of the gradient, making it much more flexible than other brush types. Lazy and Hard Blur Brushes Lazy and Hard Blur Brushes make a blurred image with a defined blurred edge. When used correctly, Lazy Blur Brushes make ghosting images in the location where the blurred edge is located. Hard Blur Brushes don't have a defined edge, so they create an imperfect image. Using these brushes is good for creating a "fuzzy" edge. For the best results, use very small amounts of Hard Blur Brushes. Soft and Pixel Blur Brushes Soft Blur Brushes and Pixel Blur Brushes use soft edges to make a blurred image with rounded edges. When used correctly, Pixel Blur Brushes allow you to blur an image in different areas. You can make a blurred image look like it's coming out from one direction or from another. Soft Blur Brushes can be used to blur a whole image or to blur just an object in an image. Wave Brushes Wave Brus
