This invention relates to an electrolyte-containing aqueous solution for use in a battery and more particularly to an electrolyte-containing aqueous solution which is advantageous for use in a lithium battery. When a carbon material such as coke or graphite is used as the negative electrode in a lithium battery it has already been known that in the battery a slight amount of lithium is deposited on the surface of the negative electrode and the battery performance is thus improved. It has also been known that when a lithium battery with such a negative electrode is stored at high temperatures (temperature of 80.degree. C. for example) in a battery room for a long time, the lithium ions disappear from the negative electrode and a serious heat generation problem arises in that the heat generated in the battery causes the electrolyte to decompose and the result is that the battery performance is degraded. For me, the Alpina-Navi BMW 3.0-liter engine is really the answer to my prayers. It's the engine I most wanted a BMW car to have when I joined BMW and I've been very excited about it since the first day. It features several design highlights: a new "European" engine, a high-performance camshaft, a high-activity exhaust system, and a boosted high-performance direct-injection system. While the other engine options like the standard N20, the N57, or the twin-turbo V8 served as powertrains to some degree for the Alpina-Navi, it's still the 3.0-liter engine in its own right and it really makes its presence felt. Alpina makes the Bavarian boxer engine even more emphatic than it already is, which makes all its plus points suddenly even more attractive. It's a pleasure to drive. The new 3.0-liter is the most powerful BMW engine to come along in many a day. Indeed, it's a tour de force for BMW, and there's not a sound made in the engine bay that you won't hear. When you get into the Alpina-Navi, it's easy to envision the three new powertrains in the BMW range: the new 3.0-liter comes into play in the Alpina-Navi and in the M6 Gran Coupe. Performance numbers won't be revealed till later this year, when BMW releases the engine's debut in Germany, but I have a quick impression of what happens in the Inductive assembly of the synovial membrane-lining cell: a potential target for anti-rheumatic therapy. Interactions between macrophages and synovial fibroblasts (SFs) are essential for the recruitment and subsequent functional activation of SF. Synovial membrane-lining cells (SMLCs) also play a role in joint inflammation as they produce some cytokines and chemokines and participate in the autoimmune responses that mediate the destruction of joint. In order to study the function and identify potential targets of SMLCs and their cell-to-cell interactions with macrophages and SF, we took advantage of the Ad5E1/mIL-2(+)/Pt system, which allows for the selective expansion of SMLCs. By injecting Ad5E1/mIL-2(+) and Pt into rat knee joints, both SMLCs and macrophages could be selectively expanded in vivo. These cells were then purified by fluorescence-activated cell sorting (FACS) analysis. SMLCs and macrophages isolated by FACS exhibited typical morphological, biochemical and functional properties and the relative ratio of macrophages to SMLCs was also the same as in vivo. Analysis of the cultured cells by flow cytometry and immunohistochemistry confirmed the co-expression of the macrophage marker F4/80 and the SMLC marker Sca-1. The selected Ad5E1/mIL-2(+) and Pt selectively expand SMLCs and macrophages in vivo, which may thus serve as a good model to study the physiological roles of macrophages and SMLCs in inflammatory conditions.
