Wal-Mart Stores is out with a study showing how many restaurants could be created if McDonald's and Burger King bought up America's fast-food industry. It found that 9.2 billion servings of pizza could be served across the U.S. if McDonald's and Burger King bought up the industry. The company notes that the same number of pizza pies could be sold in just four years if the chains open their own 2,000 stores. McDonald's has 500 U.S. restaurants and Burger King has about 800. Wal-Mart says it worked with research firm Technomic, which compared the fast-food industry's supply with demand, based on a previous Technomic study that found there is an average of 5.7 meals per person served at fast-food restaurants across the U.S. "The industry average was very close to what Wal-Mart had found in the previous study," Technomic researcher Paul Griffith told the Journal Sentinel. "The difference was that [in this study], we were looking at all the fast-food restaurants, and at home, we looked at how many of the meals would be eaten at home." The report states that if McDonald's and Burger King bought up the entire fast-food industry, there could be up to 7.1 million jobs created. Wal-Mart is a big employer in the U.S., with about 1.3 million employees. In June, the company announced it had returned to the black
