I have a code to support UIAccessibility (12), however it works only with OS X 10.9 or higher. Is it better to switch my code to support lower OS version or is it OK to stick to the code? A: It seems to be easy enough to support lower OS versions and if you can't you'd probably have your hands full with iOS 7 anyway. The following is from Apple's "Viewing accessibility content in the web" documentation: Your app can also detect and respond to user events, such as keyboard input, VoiceOver status changes, and changes to the user's accessibility preferences. In iOS 6 and earlier, to support this capability, your app must have the UniversalAccess framework in its application bundle. In iOS 7 and later, the iOS_accessibility_api framework is available as part of the iOS framework library. So the answer seems to be that your app should work in iOS 6+ but iOS 7+ is essential to support accessibility features. Proton magnetic resonance spectroscopy in liver biopsies from pediatric patients with chronic hepatitis B.
