Members of the cannabis-only club will be given access to 20 cannabis strains across different classes of potency as well as a fully stocked cannabis menu. But the group is not licensed to provide cannabis oil, which is a Class B drug, as per current legislation in the UK. Mike Stockwell, who also owns the Stockwell vineyard in the UK, told Business Insider it was legal for him to open his club. Visit Business Insider's homepage for more stories. The UK's first cannabis-only social club will open on Tuesday — more than a month after the country's government legalised the use of recreational cannabis by adults aged 18+. If you wanted to purchase cannabis in the UK in your home, if you live in a residential property that is your own, you've had to go to a licensed dealer. But the new social club is not licensed to sell cannabis oil, according to the British law. You must therefore purchase the products from a dealer if you want to consume cannabis at the club.
