It functions like a powerful engine, and the more we know and become acquainted with it, the more we can learn how to use it for our benefit. The best way to know anything about the inner workings of the mind is to develop relationships with the minds of others. This is a true path to spiritual growth. All of us have been taught from the time that we were young that we are supposed to be able to live independently, because we are able to think for ourselves. It's interesting that we have this delusion of being able to live independently, because in reality we are completely dependent on our environment. Our environment and situation in our world is the totality of our decisions and choices in regard to our ability to manifest reality. There are no accidents in the Universe. Everything that is, is for a reason. If we could understand our purpose as a child, it would be a fun way to live. If we never grew beyond that place, and never developed spiritually, we would be very limited. It would be hard to envision much of the world around us. So how do we nurture that childlike wonder, in order to truly understand that our spiritual growth is our greatest measure of freedom? It is through relationships with others. What do you do to nurture and support your spiritual growth? What makes you think that you cannot ever fulfill that which you love?
