Among hospitalized patients with atrial fibrillation (AF) anticoagulation therapy with warfarin is often curtailed at the time of discharge. Whether current guidelines for warfarin therapy can be routinely applied to stable outpatients is unknown. This retrospective cohort study was conducted to assess the benefits and risks of continued outpatient therapy in a multi-facility Veterans Affairs (VA) population. Patients admitted with AF at 2 VA medical centers from January 2002 to December 2007 were identified using pharmacy and clinical databases and followed through the end of 2008. Data on patient demographics, AF type, anticoagulation status prior to admission, stroke risk, comorbidities and medications, clinical outcomes, and all-cause mortality were abstracted. In 32,817 patients admitted with AF, 17,289 (53.5%) received warfarin and 14,722 (46.5%) received no anticoagulant therapy at discharge.
