It has its own embedded web page that can display up to 12 hours in 12 or 24 hour mode. A small "Klox!" pops up in the tray and after it has finished setting itself up the application is completely hidden. There is no window or visual indication of Klox being running. You can have it update the website every 5 minutes, every 10 minutes, or every hour. You can also use an RSS feed to have the website update itself every time there is a new item. There are lots of other options to tweak Klox such as size, sound, and whether the tray icon is hidden when Klox is running. You can also customize the look of the clock and add up to 10 icons. These can be all text, or 3 of any of the image formats on your computer. They can be arranged however you like in a grid, but there is also the option to have them laid out as a circle. Click on the clock to bring up a menu. Here you can choose from 14 different clock styles, set up the time and date, and set an alarm. I really like the included sound that plays when Klox is set to update the website. It's just the right amount of notification so you don't have to keep looking at the clock and feel bored. The clock can be minimized or unmmimized when Klox is running. At the bottom of the tray is a tray icon, which is what you would normally click to bring up the Klox properties. You can change what appears when you click on the tray icon, hide the tray icon,
