Anatomical variations in popliteal artery and popliteofibular trunk: implications for reconstructive surgery. To document the anatomical variations of the proximal popliteal artery and popliteofibular trunk. Anatomical study. Anatomical dissection was performed in each of the 200 consecutive specimens harvested from the trunk of embalmed cadavers. The popliteal artery originated in 98% from the tibial artery. Exceptions occurred in only 3% of the cases and were of clinical relevance. The popliteofibular trunk originated as a communicating branch between the fibular and tibial arteries in 3% of the cases and as a branch of the medial sural artery in 93% of the cases. We also found a communicating branch between the popliteal artery and deep posterior tibial artery in a single case. To improve the quality of the articular reconstruction in cases of total knee or patellofemoral knee arthroplasty, and to prevent compartment syndrome in patients undergoing amputation above or below the knee, detailed knowledge of the anatomy and variations of the popliteal artery and popliteofibular trunk is essential.
