In the past, they've sent them off for a week of training camp to separate the wheat from the chaff. In 2017, they sent the most promising of their pass catchers to learn from the best at Mankato State. And last season, they sent four to the annual rookie minicamp in the Windy City. Now comes the serious part of the wide receivers' summer. After finishing one of the league's worst offensive units in 2017, the Vikings will start by trying to get their young receivers — Adam Thielen, Stefon Diggs, Laquon Treadwell, Laquon Treadwell, and Kyle Rudolph — and veterans — Mike Wallace and Cordarrelle Patterson — on the same page in 2018. It's called "the summer school" on the Vikings' official website. It's a chance for the receiver corps to bond in a small, private setting — where things are a bit more relaxed and less structured than they are in the Vikings' weight room or on the practice field. There, coach Mike Zimmer arrives on campus with a whistle and a clipboard for overseeing player instruction. There, players can learn about different techniques and concepts from the staff. This summer, with Zimmer overseeing the process, the Vikings will try to help the receivers improve their route-running. "I'd love to just be a sponge and absorb everything I can from Coach Zimmer," said Thielen. "It's like a mini-training camp. It's a really good opportunity to learn from him and work with your position coach and see how he's teaching as well and figure out what we can learn from the game. I don't think there's a better place to do it." While attending the "summer school" isn't mandatory for the receivers, it's a requirement that might be welcomed by them all. The Vikings have struggled to develop quality depth at the position. Diggs, a second-round pick in 2015, played with a hamstring injury throughout training camp last year and missed eight games. e24f408de9
