There are two ways to open your document. You can choose from a list of them in the File menu and then select File > Open... or you can just start typing the location of your file in the Open dialog box. The interface is divided into three areas of the screen that communicate how you're viewing your Photoshop document. You can refer to the Scopes area of the window (see Figure 2-11) for a refresher. This area shows you the most important information about the document you are viewing. For example, it will show you the current size of the image and any layers you have created. It will also show you information about the image's transparency mode (not shown in Figure 2-11), which tells you how the alpha layer will influence the transparency of pixels below it. Figure 2-11: The Scopes area shows you the current size of your document, the number of layers, and whether you have created any masks. The Layers area of the window (see Figure 2-12) shows you the various layers you have created. Usually the first layer on your document is a new layer that you've created. Select the layer by clicking on it and then double-click to open the Layer Control dialog box (refer to Figure 2-12). Then, in the Layers area, you can select the Pencil tool and begin drawing on the document, or select the Brush tool and begin painting on the document. The History area of the Photoshop window (refer to Figure 2-11) shows you the various actions you've performed on your image. Click a button to undo or redo the action. If you've created multiple

" Leo said. "It was playing with his name on it. That's how humble he was." Sparked by the opportunity to play for the Kentucky Wildcats, Wilder came to Memphis, impressing coach Cuonzo Martin, who was familiar with Wilder because he played at UC-Irvine in the late 1990s. "He's that one kid who's got that hybrid physical talent," Martin said. "If he's asked to go off the ball, you're like, 'Jabari, is that you? Go run out that way.' He can do it." Wilder was more than a hybrid at Memphis. He wowed Martin by posting the fastest 40 time among all top-100 recruits and shooting 9 of 10 from the free-throw line. He also showed a deft touch on the basketball court. "He just did everything for us," Wilder said. Though he made more than 100 three-pointers for the first time in his career and led the Tigers in scoring as a true freshman, Wilder opted not to enter the NBA Draft in 2010. Instead, he opted to stay at Memphis and grow. "For me, that's my biggest accomplishment is just growing as a person and as a man," Wilder said. "There's certain things that I can't change, but I'm always willing to improve and work on things I can. I just feel like I need to evolve, because if I don't, I'm not going to have much of an opportunity." He certainly evolved as an NBA prospect. He's now one of the top prospects in what is an extremely talented draft. The 6-foot-8 wing still profiles as a combo guard, but he's gaining reputation as one of the best isolation scorers in the country. Wilder leads this draft class in rebounding, assists, blocks, steals and defensive rating. He played some power forward as a freshman at Memphis and is 6-foot-7 this season. Even if it's not Wilder, or Anthony Davis, or any number of notables, the 2014 NBA Draft is sure to feature some surprises. "I think it's really going to
