Good quality of life after bilateral total hip arthroplasty: a comparative study between conventional total hip arthroplasty and left hip arthroplasty. The survival rate of conventional total hip arthroplasty (THA) is satisfactory. It is reported that THA has been less often used for bilateral total hip arthroplasty (BTHA) in Japan. Our aim is to evaluate the postoperative quality of life (QOL) of BTHA, compared with that of conventional THA, in Japan. The

QOL after THA was evaluated in 752 patients, with a median follow-up time of 4.3 years (range: 1-24). There were 579 patients treated with THA, the others with left hip arthroplasty. The QOL scores of the THA patients were significantly better in the conventional THA and all the QOL scores of the THA patients were significantly better in the conventional THA. There were 21 patients (2.9%) who had serious complications, but no patients died. When the THA patients were divided into four groups, young patients and patients treated with conventional THA showed significantly better QOL than old patients and patients treated with left hip arthroplasty. QOL after THA is excellent, even after BTHA. There are no serious complications after THA. QOL is not significantly different between THA and BTHA in young patients treated with conventional THA. We concluded that THA is a suitable treatment for bilateral hip arthritis. Sony plans to launch its PlayStation 5 in 2019, and Sony Interactive Entertainment president Andrew Version: 5.0.1 Every week, The Boston Globe will be on the go in search of the latest numbers, trends and anecdotes from local life. Each Monday, we will post the Globe column, “The Numbers,” and then the results of the weekly Globe Health Poll. The Globe has polled local residents on a wide range of health topics — everything from how many people know the symptoms of diabetes to what’s up with the rate of obesity in the area. This week’s poll focused on the most common medical problems among those in the community. We asked people if they knew their own blood pressure and cholesterol levels, if they’ve ever visited a doctor for advice on managing their health, and if they’ve ever had a flu shot. For those who knew their cholesterol levels, 43 percent said they were high, 22 percent said they were normal, and 21 percent said they were low. For blood pressure, 48 percent said they had normal readings; 33 percent said they were high; and 17 percent said they had low readings. The increase in numbers of people who said they knew their cholesterol and blood pressure levels over the past year could be due in part to the fact that for years people have been talking about their high levels on social media, said Dr. Steven Nissen, chairman of the department of cardiovascular medicine at the Cleveland Clinic, and also chairman of The Cardiac Clinics at Cleveland Clinic. “All of a sudden, it’s a lot of exposure,” said Nissen, who spoke with the Globe last month about how doctors
