Group 11 metalloid ions in aqueous solutions containing silica-coated nanoparticles. Aqueous suspensions of silica-coated particles containing the group 11 metalloid ions gallium, indium, or thallium are studied by X-ray absorption spectroscopy. The particle coating is of the monolayer type and contains both silicon and oxygen. The low- and high-spin states of these ions are probed at a momentum transfer of 0.6 Å⁻¹ by applying partial-wave decomposition of X-ray absorption spectra. Gaussian deconvolution of the spectra provides estimates for the Gaussian width and the effective coordination number around the ion. We also measured the valence-band spectra of these particles by X-ray photoemission spectroscopy and establish the sp(2)/sp(3) ratio at the surfaces. The adsorption characteristics of Ga, In, and Tl cations at the particle surfaces are therefore determined for the first time. A simple procedure for intrahepatic biliary drainage. An alternative biliary decompression procedure which does not require laparotomy is described. Used in seven patients with liver disease, the intrahepatic stent is inserted through an antegrade puncture of the hepatic artery from an external retrograde site, and can be adjusted by proximal inflation or deflating. The procedure resulted in early and long-term relief of jaundice in all cases and no mortality, morbidity or case complications. The technique and evolution of the patients showed that using stent placement in an antegrade fashion is safe and useful in the palliation of benign and malignant obstructive jaundice.
