The Book is about the War between Kaurava and Pandava. Redox potential and the conversion of ferredoxin to ferredoxin-NADP reductase by ferredoxin-thioredoxin reductase in an alga. In the unicellular alga, Chlorella, the ferredoxin (Fd) to ferredoxin-NADP reductase (FNR) conversion occurs in two steps. In the first step, Fd is converted to a complex between Fd and FNR by ferredoxin-thioredoxin reductase (FTR), and in the second step, the complex is converted to FNR by the action of NADPH. In this work, the reactions were carried out with purified Chlorella FTR-FNR complexes prepared in the presence of 2.5 and 25 mM GSSG. The effect of GSSG on the FTR-FNR reaction was to decrease the stability of the FTR-FNR complexes. The native and non-native gel electrophoresis patterns for the reaction were identical, which indicated that the GSSG had little effect on the structure of the Fd-FNR complex. The second-order rate constant for NADPH oxidation was decreased by half at 25 mM GSSG and was not affected by 2.5 mM GSSG, which is consistent with the GSSG effect on the stability of the FTR-FNR complex. The midpoint redox potential for the reaction was decreased to less than 0.12 V by 0.25 mM GSSG and was not affected by 2.5 mM GSSG. No GSSG effect was observed on the second-order rate constant for the reaction with the 2.
