Concept and Research The goal is not just to make the player's skills more realistic, but also to make their gameplay as authentic as possible. FIFA 22 also introduces "Real Player Motion," which builds on the foundations of the RPO system and Togga, the system that makes player movement in FIFA possible. This provides for easier to control player movements at all speeds. The recent FIFA tournament winners Real Madrid will be use one of the game's new kits for the UEFA Champions League. "There has always been a call for more realism in our game. For years, we've been looking at new ways of capturing and interpreting the data from real-life competitions - from club matches to the FIFA World Cup," said Max Andrews, the FIFA brand director, in a press release. "With the world's best players collaborating with us to develop FIFA 22 we have been able to take this trend to a new level. Real Player Motion represents a significant evolution of the gameplay system for our upcoming game, meaning not only is the data more accurate but the gameplay experience will give players an even more realistic feel." Real Player Motion Real Player Motion builds on the foundations of the new RPO system and Togga. The system will allow players to move more naturally and make tackles more likely. Motion Capture Suits will be used to make sure everything is authentic and the data is more representative of what happens in a real match. Real Player Motion will also allow users to control their team much more fluidly. All players will be able to go faster, and use their best skills, no matter what they are trying to accomplish. During the creation process, EA Sports was assisted by Real Madrid and the current FIFA World Cup champion Portugal, who participated in the EA Sports FIFA World Cup tournament. These players were also involved in the creation of the new Bundesliga management game announced last week. However, the key player for FIFA 22 is the player motion capture suit worn by the athletes: although the suit has served well for the previous five installments of the franchise, the team at EA Sports have worked with various manufacturers in order to create a more realistic footballing experience. The new series of suits have been designed and tested at multiple professional football clubs, as well as their first installment, the Real Madrid CF academy. The 30 Real players were also present in the studio during the creation of FIFA 22 and often participated in detailed evaluations of

FIFA® (Fédération Internationale de Football Association) is the world's leading manufacturer of sports games. Each year, FIFA games are enjoyed by hundreds of millions of players across the world - more than any other sports game. All the FIFA games are published by Electronic Arts, a world-leading developer, publisher and distributor of interactive entertainment software. The FIFA franchise, which began in 1994, now generates a turnover of €1.8 billion per year, and includes the award-winning FIFA Soccer, FIFA Manager, FIFA Street, FIFA 18 and FIFA Ultimate Team. FIFA is one of the most popular sports franchises of all time, with games installed on hundreds of millions of consoles. What can you do with FIFA? FIFA games have always been about more than just playing football - they are sports simulations with an incredible depth of strategy, skill and emotion. From the very first game in 1994, to this year's FIFA 18, there have always been many options on the pitch, with fresh game modes, match dynamics, variety of challenges, and a host of player roles that put the match into perspective. And by moving and interacting with your players, whether it's summoning them through the contact-sensitive D-pad or tapping through them in a multitudinous amount of ways with the touch screen, you can create and control matches like never before. This year's FIFA 22 is all about the power of the player. With an arsenal of new player movements, all of which can be mapped and modified to the way you prefer to play, you can customize your players just like you've never done before. You can also share and swap moves, allowing you to build your very own avatar and completely redefine the type of player you play as. With new ways of striking and receiving, you can now put the ball into the best position you can think of and still get the kind of chances you want. And with new aiming systems that use more information and pitch markers, even the simple act of striking the ball has never been so immersive or intuitive. What's new in FIFA 20? FIFA 20 delves deeper into the physics of the ball, especially on the wing, while still providing more control and ball flow for defenders. This leads to faster, more exciting gameplay, whether you're playing with one human or up to 32 AI
