Cotylomelum minutum Cotylomelum minutum is a fungus of the family Parmeliaceae (Agaricales). It is commonly known as the mouse ears. Distribution The fungus is found in Europe, North America, and Asia. It was reported from Austria in 1993. This fungus is also known as the black ear and the miniature cotylomelum. Description The fruit bodies of C. minutum are brown, convex discs approximately 5 to 6 mm in diameter. There are a number of white, oblong or linear, club-shaped hyphae present, each measuring up to 10 μm .

They are arranged in a star-like manner, offset by the radial arrangement of the hyphae. The ascocarp comprises chains of dendroid (dendritic) appressoria (blister-like structures) measuring 7 to 9 μm . Similar species The black ear, which can be distinguished by its dark, convex discs and upper half brown, has a wider distribution. It is known from North America, Europe, and Asia. The song-spoon cotylomelum, which is yellow in color, grows on conifer wood. It is found in the Pacific Northwest of North America. The two leaders issued a joint statement that "Egypt in no circumstances will allow the return of troops from the Sinai to their original positions before the signing of the Camp David agreements...". They also declared: "Neither will Egypt allow any military interference in the internal affairs of Israel". Palestinians: Innocent victims The report says: "Some Arab leaders felt that this determination would jeopardize

Orem • Home with a dog in the backyard, Gus Fritz says he'd rather be unhappy than dead. His first year at Utah Valley University was a struggle, he said Tuesday, but by his second year he was on the cheerleading squad. That's when he met Jeff Buechel. They began talking through campus life and eventually Buechel invited him to join his Boy Scout troop, the U.S. Cadet Legion. "You have all of these stuff on your brain," Fritz said about scout camp. "You're there by yourself. You get away from home for a while. You have a lot of independence." The two became firm friends. On Friday and Saturday nights, he would go to the movies with Buechel and his friends. On Saturday nights, they'd drink their favorite drink together: a pitcher of beer mixed with nonalcoholic sparkling water. "It made us crazy," Fritz said. On July 14, Fritz
