The invention relates to the development and use of metalloproteinases that have specific activity at the luminal surface of the intestinal mucosa and can, therefore, be used as markers of epithelial cell injury in inflammatory bowel disease. Inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) is an idiopathic chronic inflammatory bowel disease which is manifested by diarrhea and excess abdominal cramping. The onset of this disease is generally in young adulthood and is most commonly diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40. The diagnosis of IBD is based on a combination of clinical symptoms and results of endoscopic and radiographic examinations of the colon. It is thought that at least two factors must be present before the onset of disease. (1) a susceptibility gene which interacts with environmental factors to produce clinically manifested IBD. (2) the activation of an unknown immunologic stimulus. IBD is broadly classified into Crohn's disease (CD) and ulcerative colitis (UC), each with differing etiologies and natural histories. CD is characterized by recurrent, discontinuous inflammation of the entire gastrointestinal tract, but is not limited to the gastrointestinal tract. By contrast, UC is characterized by inflammation of the large intestine that begins near the anal verge and extends proximally. The inflammation is usually continuous, beginning abruptly and associated with diarrhea. Cytokines released by cells of the immune system infiltrate the bowel wall and cause further tissue damage. The cytokines which most likely play a role in the pathogenesis of IBD are tumor necrosis factor, interleukin-1, interferon-gamma. (IFN-gamma.), interleukin-2 (IL-2), and prostaglandin E.sub.2. IL-1 and IFN-gamma. initiate, develop, and amplify the inflammatory response. In contrast, there is evidence that prostaglandins, particularly, PGE.sub.2, suppress the inflammatory response and mediate healing of the intestinal mucosa. There are two types of IBD, one is associated with granulomas in the intestine and the other is not. It has been suggested that the type of IBD is associated with a particular genetic predisposition. Accordingly, if one could identify such individuals, one could use genetic tests to identify individuals who will have the disease and use other methods to intervene before the disease is manifest. For example, if testing of the IL-1.alpha. gene revealed the IL-1.alpha. allele

As Barcelona's third out of midfield - after Cesc Fabregas and Dani Alves - the 24-year-old made his presence known with some neat technique. He received a pass from Xavi in the centre circle, before chipping the ball over the top of the Juve backline, before it dropped to David Villa. The Spain international then drew defenders out of position before rifling in an unstoppable shot that clipped the leg of Leonardo Bonucci and flew into the net. Vilanova acknowledged that his side could not defend to its full capacity, in particular their defensive positioning. "We conceded a penalty but we could not play to our full potential, it was difficult to defend," he said in the post-match press conference. "In the first half our defence was passive and when they had the ball we didn't have the right cover on the wings. It was an error. "It was a very different game from the away game against Valencia, where we won and played well. Today we lacked concentration and focus. It wasn't down to the injuries, it was down to the fact that we had not played for five days and were still adapting. "Last year we had a bad start to the season and we played some terrible matches. The only way is to get back to basics. "We have had two different managers in the last two weeks, but we have got a great set of players, players who support one another. If we take the ball and make runs there will be no issue, we will get back on track."[Extracellular calcium and chloride transport in erythrocytes]. The ultrastructural studies on the redistribution of calcium ions at the rat erythrocytes under the action of dipropylacetone, latrunculin B and nocodazole have demonstrated their presence in the junctional complexes between the hemoglobin moieties of the erythrocytes. The research was carried out using the fluorescent analogue of calcium-calcium green-5N. As revealed by the technique of electron spectroscopy for chemical analysis (ESCA), the Ca-compounds are concentrated in the plasmatic membrane, inside the erythrocytes and in the junctions between the hemoglobin moieties. Transendothelial transport of calcium and chloride ions at the vascular wall is accompanied by the redistribution of
