“HyperMotion Technology works in a similar way to the Blister Cards used in the past for super moves. Players can use footage from a certain player to execute a one-off move,” said Oliver Biermann, FIFA Creative Director. “This gives creative players an increased arsenal to play with and the technology makes you think on your feet and decide how to play, when to use a move and how to play.” The technology is now available in Customization and provides the first authentic motion capture data set ever available for all elements of a football match. Some of the game’s most recognisable moments were captured with this technology. For the FIFA 20 Launch Trailer, watch the below video featuring two of the world’s greatest FIFA players - Lukas Podolski and Zlatan Ibrahimovic. “Players can use footage from a certain player to execute a one-off move,” said Oliver Biermann, FIFA Creative Director. “This gives creative players an increased arsenal to play with and the technology makes you think on your

The number of movements captured in this data provide a more complex and accurate and different gameplay experience than any other game in the FIFA series. HyperMotion technology also powers specific elements of gameplay in key areas. Passes are created naturally and combined with a certain player’s characteristics, in order to give a different feeling to the game. For example, a more direct pass travels faster and is easier to control for that player than a simpler pass. Other game elements that make use of this technology are the ability to play one-twos and free kicks – the real speed and movement of the ball is recreated. The HyperMotion Sensor, now available in the Create a Player window, visualises the number of data points recorded. It works like a ‘brain’ that assesses each individual data point and, using the surrounding data, automatically chooses the best data
