
Fifa 22 [March-2022]

“We’re excited to introduce this new generation of physics,” said Oliver Tickell, EA SPORTS FIFA’s director of football. “We are listening to player feedback from the last update, and we’re proud to deliver on that at a time when the fans want to feel this new style of football in action.” AI matches now rely on the new physics engine and work closely with the player ratings system (called the Match Engine). HyperMotion now focuses on all aspects of play to create a more authentic game.

The engine expands on the same game engine technology used for FIFA 19 and includes the following key innovations: Tackles, aerial challenges and ball control are improved with a higher level of responsiveness. Bouncing passes are more physically accurate, offering greater unpredictability at all times. Aerial duels are more diverse. Player positioning is more unpredictable, and tackling and movement are more affected by force and direction. Spiked walls, trip lines and walls sprayed with paint are more realistic to create a more challenging environment and natural flow of play. Rookies and Junior Players are identified by new on-the-field performance systems with ratings that reflect a player's ability to advance to higher levels of play. Age Ratings feature new progression curves for every position. More than any other update in recent years, the Match Engine has been driven by player feedback and input. It’s created a comprehensive system of play: Pitch innovations drive play, including stadium surfaces that respond to the players (spiked walls, trip lines and painted walls now react). New ground type features like artificial gravity and an artificial drop in temperature for winter conditions. Dynamic weather systems improve weather conditions and affect play. Matchday celebrations and friendly matches are also more fun. Localized differences The touch screen, touchpad and controller inputs will support local differences. The new physics technology and AI improvements are driving gameplay across all of EA SPORTS FIFA 22, and localized differences can be expected across platforms.
