The “Real Player Motion” model, a combination of data, vision and real player movement, allows for every action, every movement on and off the ball, the way a real football player does them. When a player is facing up, kicking, dribbling or shooting, the ball is also moving. When a player is chasing, dribbling, tackling or heading the ball, the player’s model also moves accordingly. The game uses the same physics engine as FIFA 19 as well as the improved camera system and AI system of FIFA 19, which create a new level of interaction and fluidity in gameplay. “You will experience how a real football player can move in the most realistic way, creating a ‘chase’ with only a few steps, passing and heading a ball,” says Adidas creative director for soccer simulations Kostas Tsanos. Players who have trained with Adidas’ The Player Motion technology will also notice the difference from last year’s game. If they haven’t had the opportunity to improve their skills in live action, they can simulate training themselves in FIFA 22. The Player Motion technology helps to improve core exercises and agility training and is available for all in-game modes. This is the technology that enables players to improve the way they kick, pass, dribble and shoot the ball. Adidas’ online Pitch Vision system, first launched in FIFA 19, has been improved to offer more accurate ball and player positions that adapt to changing weather conditions. You can now use Pitch Vision to enhance your play in any weather conditions, offering a clearer view in all weather conditions. When the sun is out, or when there is a heavy haze, Pitch Vision will display the pitch as more accurately as possible. By using this, you can use it to: Create difficult set-pieces, particularly for Set Up Play Better understand free kicks Spot off-sides Prevent situations where the player does not see the ball moving in front of them, including free kicks Make more realistic long-distance shots MATCH PREVIEW It’s an exciting new generation of football. A new era of players, a new generation of technology, a new narrative of football - FUT 22 is the game that looks to break the boundaries of what football video games can achieve. Already there
