I was getting the 50% link juice transfer from [domain], but I wanted to clean up the links on the domain itself and really get all of the inlinks like Google's webmaster tools recommends. I'll pull the old links up on my page in a few days. I appreciate the help. I actually think that it's ok to get your links that are coming from popular pages. In fact, if your page is a listing for a larger company, it's better to get links from those pages to your site. I think a compromise for your SEO benefits is to add to the list of popular pages that are in your domain. I am actually writing a post on this as well. In fact, I will be giving an example of what a company did that seems to be working (just as an example, of course). I agree with all the comments about whether or not it is ok to get links from those sites. However, being a content creation site where we are trying to monetize our own content (rather than just relying on paid links), I don't want to lose out on this potential traffic that Google has to offer. I'd love to see an example of what a company did that worked. You could even link to that post when talking about it in case anyone is interested. I actually think that it's ok to 648931e174
