We evaluated the analytical precision, within and between runs, of a radioimmunoassay for estradiol-17 beta (E2) and a colorimetric assay for total conjugated estrogen (CE) in serum. Recovery of added E2 and CE, and detection limits, were near identical in both assays. Reproducibility of the measured E2 concentrations was generally quite good, with coefficients of variation less than 8 and 15%, respectively. However, within- and between-run coefficients of variation for the CE assay were 55 and 52%, respectively. Thus, use of CE as a serum marker of endogenous E2 in women is greatly limited in practice because of assay imprecision. We conclude that a radioimmunoassay (RIA) for E2 is the assay of choice in a clinical laboratory.We have encountered several problems in trying to use our printer in a user password protected environment.
