Free and Shareware Software Most professional and many hobbyist digital photographers use and even own paid software programs. However, some of the best work is done with free and open-source software. Free and shareware software programs abound, and most are available for download over the Internet. Free software tends to be very basic, with some programs not supporting saving of files directly to the camera's memory card. Adobe's Photoshop Elements is a good example. Mac and Windows versions of Photoshop offer more features, including the ability to edit RAW files. Although not all free and shareware software is appropriate for professional photographers, you can use these programs to gain some experience working with images on your own and to save money. We cover some of the best free and shareware tools in the "Software for Serious and Amateur Photographers" sidebar, later in this chapter. ## Software for Serious and Amateur Photographers In the preceding sections, we show you how to turn your camera into an image-editing tool with Photoshop and Elements. But, of course, the camera is just a tool that picks up and records images. Many photographers believe that the camera is the most important piece of equipment they use. You don't have to take that stance. You can use it to improve the quality of your images without having to invest a lot of money or time. Most manufacturers of all types of digital cameras, including medium-range digital cameras, offer good affordable software tools, often with a basic version for the low end, midlevel, and high-end cameras. We've listed some of the most popular software programs in several sections throughout this book. Some of them

[Screening method for trichothecene mycotoxins on wheat grain by high performance liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry]. The trichothecene mycotoxins (TMs), mainly deoxynivalenol (DON) and nivalenol (NIV), are the main contaminants in the grains, which become a problem in food safety. This paper describes the screening of TMs in wheat by high performance liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry (HPLC-MS/MS). An amount of 100 mg wheat samples was mixed with 0.05 mol/L hydrochloric acid, and then extracted with acetonitrile. After centrifugation and filtration, the supernatant was collected and determined by HPLC-MS/MS. The recoveries of trichothecenes were higher than 92% at spiked levels from 1 to 5 microg/kg. The limits of detection (LODs) were 0.04 microg/kg for NIV and DON, 0.02 microg/kg for diacetoxyscirpenol, 0.01 microg/kg for T-2, T-3 and HT-2, and 0.1 microg/kg for T-4. The LODs were less than 0.01 microg/kg for nivalenol-3-glucoside. The relative standard deviations (RSDs) of the results at spiked levels of 1 microg/kg NIV and DON, 1 microg/kg T-2, T-3, and HT-2, and 1 microg/kg T-4 were 3.7%, 4.7%, 4.6%, 3.3%, and 1.3%, respectively. The results showed that the screening method had good specificity, accuracy, precision, and sample recoveries. and proteins were determined using a NanoDrop spectrophotometer (Thermo Fisher, Wilmington, DE, USA). Quality of RNA was verified by the A₂₆₀/A₂₈₀ ratio, and RNA integrity was determined using standard denaturing agarose gel electrophoresis. Quantitative real-time polymerase chain reaction (PCR) [#Sec16] ----- Total RNA (0.5 µg) was reverse-transcribed with random primers using a RevertAid First Strand cDNA Synthesis Kit (Thermo Scientific, Waltham, MA, USA). Reverse transcription product was amplified using SYBR Green PCR Master Mix (Takara, Japan) and the Thermal Cycler Dice Real Time System II (Takara, Japan).
