Chromatic confocal microscopy for imaging genetically encoded fluorescent proteins in C. elegans. The nematode Caenorhabditis elegans is a versatile genetic model organism that has been widely used to study a wide array of biological processes, including the development of the nervous system. Genetic methods for activating fluorescent reporters in specific cell types in a time-dependent manner through cell-specific promoters have dramatically improved the ability to analyze the anatomy and function of the neural system in the worm. These advances have been facilitated by the development of transgenic strains that express a reporter of interest in a cell-specific manner. We describe here the use of chromatic confocal microscopy, a simple and cost-effective method to image genetically encoded fluorescent proteins in C. elegans.The present invention relates to information storage and retrieval apparatus and methods, and, more particularly, to information storage and retrieval apparatus and methods for partial matches of query data. Information storage and retrieval systems have been proposed which store query data in a database and use a search engine to find various kinds of information related to the query data. The present inventors have proposed an information storage and retrieval apparatus and method that uses an index for storing index data that includes locations of related data in the database. Such an information storage and retrieval apparatus and method are described in U.S. patent application Ser. No. 08/457,827, entitled INSTRUMENT AND METHOD FOR USE IN AN INFORMATION STORAGE AND RETRIEVAL SYSTEM WITH INDEXES filed Aug. 20, 1995, now U.S. Pat. No. 5,619,709. The entire disclosure of U.S. patent application Ser. No. 08/457,827, which is incorporated herein by reference, is also hereby incorporated herein by reference. U.S. patent application Ser. No. 08/457,827 discloses a type of data storage and retrieval apparatus and method having a search engine for searching an index. 1cdb36666d
