Photoshop Elements is the entry level version of Photoshop and does not contain all of Photoshop's advanced features. It is often used by beginners for editing their pictures. Photoshop Elements does have limited image editing features, but not all of those featured in Photoshop. There are a number of general features that have been around for years and are only now coming into use because of services like Flickr. Examples include 'rectilinear', 'rotate pixels', 'mirror', and 'stretch' effects. These tools can help you manipulate an image, but are rarely useful for most purposes because the images are not resizeable to a uniform size. Some other general tools include: Espresso or Instant Filter: This tool takes several seconds to apply an effect to an image, but it is useful for beginners for batch editing of multiple files. Sometimes called 'Instant Effects'. Movie: This tool compresses multiple files into a single file, and allows you to select which ones to include. Burn: This tool overwrites any bad data in an image with another file, and is generally used in editing very large files. Web: This tool converts files to the Web standard as stated by the W3C. Color Chooser: This tool lets you create custom color palettes. Fx: This tool lets you edit multiple layers at the same time. Many image editing programs are created by image editing schools that teach the subject to art students and photographers. Some of these are Photoshop, Paint Shop Pro, Corel Painter, and IrfanView. The most common features found in these types of programs are: Effects: There are numerous effects available in the programs listed above, but in those with text, these effects are often more than 100 effects bundled into a single application. Photo Processor: This type of program will typically use a 'filter' with about 10 of these more than 100 effects, but they still require a great deal of learning to get any reasonable results. Cropping: These programs often enable the user to crop, crop, crop, crop, crop and crop in an endless cycle. There are a lot of programs that do this, but they all have drawbacks. Metadata: This type of program often allows one to add meta-data to an image and save it. Viewing: Viewing is often standard and consists of things like crop, rotation, etc., but many of the

What's New in the?

Warm welts and a tingling feeling Over the past few days, I have been getting what I think is an allergic reaction to a chemical in the laundry detergent, and I would like some more advice about this. Every time I washes my clothing in the washing machine (without using detergent), I get a red rash on my torso and limbs which develop into a warm tingling feeling (similar to a tingling sensation you get when you poke a very cold and stiff dough ball and the dough is just about to form into a ball). Comments I thought I knew a thing or two about rashes, but I'm no doctor, just a young mom trying to figure out this trial and error thing with a home toilet. I've had hormonal issues, back pains, and mild eczema since birth. This sounds pretty much like chemical allergy. I'm sorry to hear that you have to go through this, but I'm happy you'll be able to talk to your doctor to find out what it is. Have you ever had any reactions to soaps? That could be something separate. I had this too. My only answer was to stick to using non-denatured detergent. You mentioned a red rash. Does this also include discoloration of your arms and legs, or is it limited to your torso and arms? I'm actually just starting to get this "chemical rash" after the skin starting to swell and then starting to itch. I've heard that it's possible to have an allergic reaction to the fabric softener also. Best to you! ~allison Last edited by allison08; 03-12-2012 at 11:04 PM. Reason: I'm not sure exactly what allison08 meant by 'using non-denatured detergent' I'm assuming it's not an allergic reaction since I've never had this reaction before with other types of laundry detergents. I'm thinking it's some kind of irritant. Thank you. Yeah, I've had reactions to many things I didn't know I had reactions to. I'm thinking it's probably something that the iron was rubbing against the fabric of my clothes. That's why I'm not using the iron. I'll continue to try to figure out what it is, and keep you posted. Thanks again! Your cuticles are pinched from the detergent &
