By Staff Violent and aggressive criminal gangs have threatened to kill two Egyptian soldiers for refusing to comply with their demand to release detainees. The gangs have demanded a ransom of one million Egyptian pounds (US$160,000) to release the captives but so far the soldiers have refused to pay the ransom. The gangs, numbering about 20, are from the border province of Sharqiya. The gangs had demanded the hostages to release those arrested following the storming of a security post last week that killed 17 members of the terror group. The members of the gangs accused the soldiers of taunting them on social media and threatening to kill them. They also claimed that the soldiers had been captured by the terrorists while on a mission to arrest them. In the past, the Syrian army has released thousands of inmates in exchange for cash and weapons or in return for the release of hostages. Last week, 11 female prisoners were released from the Aleppo Central Prison, Aleppo governorate, after a ransom was paid. Follow Emirates 24|7 on Google News. Spanish adolescents' narratives about a school friend: predictors of the frequency of retelling. Reality orientation, the disposition to accurately recognize real-life episodes as unreal, and imagination, the capacity to envision alternate, unrealistic, and positive scenarios, predict the frequency of storytelling about school friends. A sample of 407 Spanish adolescents between 11 and 17 years old completed the Reisberg story retelling task and self-report inventories about reality orientation and imagination. The most common narrative style was recurrent representation, which 648931e174

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of reducing alkali metal in a coal or oil shale in which a mixture of oxidizing agent and coal or oil shale is fired at a temperature which results in the formation of alkali metal in amounts which are less than about 10 wt. % of the total metal content of the coal or oil shale, and recovering the alkali metal, substantially free of other constituents. 2. Description of the Prior Art It is known to produce nitrogen-containing products by using coal or oil shale as a feedstock which, after cracking to provide a crude gas, is subjected to thermochemical nitrogen-containing transformation reactions which produce a crude product. The crude product generally consists of ammonia, carbon monoxide, carbonyl sulfide, carbon disulfide, hydrogen sulfide, carbonyl sulfide, and carbon disulfide. The amounts of the constituent gases, as well as the ratio of the gases, may vary depending upon the reaction conditions, including temperature, pressure, contact time, and the ratio of gas to solids. Where oil shale is used as a feedstock, the crude product may also include inerts, that is, inert gases which may include carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, methane, ethane, nitrogen, etc. In addition, the crude product may contain material which cannot be readily separated from the product gases, such as water, which may in turn cause the product gas to become corrosive. Prior to separation of the product gases and inerts and possible condensing of some of the gases, the crude product may be further processed to remove hydrogen sulfide and to reduce the concentration of the product gases to acceptable levels.

Processes for producing ammonia from a carbonyl compound are disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,885,383 and 3,295,011. Also, processes for producing ammonia from organic nitrogen compounds are disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,066,071 and 3,839,848. It is also known to treat coal or oil shale with an oxidizing agent which is typically air or oxygen-enriched air, to oxidize organic components of the shale to yield carbon monoxide and hydrogen, for example, as discussed in U.S. Pat.
