To lock an image, click the lock icon in the upper-right corner of the artboard, shown in Figure 1-8. This will lock all the layers and the document. In the case of larger documents, it will lock the entire file. Figure 1-8: Locking an image locks all of the layers and the document. To unlock, click the lock icon again. This will unlock the layers and document and leave the document locked. Click the lock icon again to lock it again. When you initially open an image, all the layers are unlocked. If you need to lock one or more layers, you can click the lock icon in the Layers palette, shown in Figure 1-9, and the image will be locked. Select the Layers palette to open it. You can select and lock individual layers, images, or groups of elements, such as a set of lines or a group of selections. Figure 1-9: Locking or unlocking selected elements. Working with Layers If you need to change an image in Photoshop, you'll need to use layers. Photoshop layers are used to hide or reveal portions of an image, to mask an image or portion of it, or to create special effects that aren't possible with the other Photoshop tools. Layers can be organized in layers or groupings, and you can organize groups in subgroups. They can also be grouped together using a mask. With layers, you can use tricks such as the selection tool. A selection tool can be used to reveal or hide different portions of an image or to create unique effects, such as distortion or reflections. Understanding the Layers Palette The Layers palette, shown in Figure 1-10, is the way to manipulate and work with layers. Layers contain a variety of tools, including Blending Modes, which I talk about in more detail in

Q: "natural" ports using iptables I've got two servers with iptables installed: eth0 - 192.168.0.123 eth1 - 192.168.0.223 I'm using the IPTABLES to port forward traffic from one server to the other. For example I forward requests from eth0:80 to eth1:80. Using: iptables -t nat -A PREROUTING -i eth0 -p tcp --dport 80 -j DNAT --to 192.168.0.223:80
Now my question is: If I were to NAT eth1 from port 555 to 192.168.0.123:20 (like - is there a "natural" way of doing this using iptables? Basically I just want to forward ports (and traffic) from one interface to another. A: Sounds like you need ip masquerading. iptables -t nat -A POSTROUTING -o eth1 -d 192.168.0.123/32 -j MASQUERADE On a national scale, multiple polls in both local and national media show that President Obama is mired in a miserable and perilous election year. In case you have missed this fact, I thought it might be useful to provide a link to a Wall Street Journal article entitled "New Polls Show Obama's Fate May Be Delicate." In it, they note that we have "been here before." At the close of 2008, a McClatchy-Marist poll had Obama at 48% approval, with 45% disapproval (more favorable than in the current poll). Gallup was off by only one point. A Marist/Tufts poll had Obama at 45% approval, with 48% disapproval. Both ABC News and CBS News had Obama up just one point. The Rasmussen poll had Obama at 50% approval, 46% disapproval. Several other polls had Obama a little above 50% approval, ranging from Obama's lowest ever 47% approval rating to 59% approval in the Economist/YouGov poll. In fact, the last presidential race in which the winning candidate lost the popular vote was the 1966 election. If you count elections since 1600, this is the seventh time a losing candidate won the popular vote (accounting for plural elections) and the fourth

Q: Why can't I pass std::unique_ptr to a function (accessing an element) I'm writing a library to access a GPIO bank using TMP36 sensor cards. I'm getting a "pointer is null" exception when I try to iterate over the sensor data. I've reduced the problem to a simple program. I create an std::unique_ptr object and call a function to access data from the pointer's element. That works fine, but if I pass the data to the function the pointer fails to access it. If I print the pointer out to the console I can see that the value has not changed. Example code. In my real project this code calls a function that records the sensor data, but I'm just trying to access the data using code I can understand before putting the code in the function. #include #include #define TMP36_TO_BITS(c) ((c & 0x03) > 2) & 0x07 #define TMP36_TO_DATA(c) (TMP36_TO_PRESCALE(c)*100 + (c&0x3F)) struct TempData { int dataValue; int version; }; void printData(const std::unique_ptr& ptr); void main() { const int pin = 11; std::unique_ptr TempDataPtr(new TempData {TMP36_TO_BITS(pin), TMP36_TO_BITS(pin), TMP36_TO_BITS(pin)}); printData(tempDataPtr); } void printData(const std::unique_ptr& ptr) { std::cout << dataValue
