The short clip below was revealed with the new trailer showing off the most exciting new gameplay feature of the game. by The small sample video shows how the feature, dubbed "HyperMotion Technology," improves players' on-ball abilities in FIFA 22. What it involves is EA capturing what a player does (like jump and turn) during a game, then having the data replay it to the player in real time. It's similar to Madden's Precision Running and Very Advanced Movement System, but for players instead of running styles. This feature also looks to improve accuracy on finishing and collision, especially during player checks and pass attempts, EA explained in a Q&A on the game's feature. The feature could also allow players to move more freely by automatically replicating a player's running or jumping style, depending on their progress. For example, a player may be unable to turn or kick far while running slowly at their defender in Madden, but the player may be able to get away with more in real-time via the feature. EA did not say if the feature will be available on consoles like the PlayStation 4 or Xbox One, but it is certainly more beneficial to play the game on those platforms. The feature will hit the PC on FIFA 22's Oct. 6 release date for $59.99 on PC, Xbox One and PS4.
