This allows the developer to only understand the entity and not worry about the 'extra' methods. I've been trying to determine a non-aggregate solution in NHibernate, but since they say it's a common solution, it's got to be really easy. The only idea I have is to create a Type Class, then I need to check each property and create a new Property object, like so: public void Save() { Session.Save(Session.GetType().GetType(this.GetType().Name + "Data")); } That's going to be quite messy if I want to add or remove things from the entity. I was reading some stuff and the way it looks like they are able to fix the problem, is by using a class like this: public class Extension : IProperty { private readonly ISet _properties; public Extension() { _properties = new HashSet(); } public PropertyType Type { get { return PropertyType.Attribute; } } public bool IsCreated { get { return this._properties.Count == 0; } } public IEnumerable Properties { get { return _properties.ToArray(); } } public string Name { get; set; } public bool IsDirty { get; set; } public bool IsNew { get { return this.IsCreated; } } public void SetProperty(PropertyInfo prop) { this._

Blisters were back for me this year because of the weather, which we think has something to do with my heart condition. I had mild brain attacks and a few unusual ones, but this year I didn't have as many as I did last year. I continue to feel anxious. I stopped taking my heart pills and I didn't take any medicine at all. It has been difficult to maintain a schedule when I don't know how long my next attack will come. It's been a hard year for me. Blisters and scalp problems often interrupted my riding. I had very weak ankles and unable to walk for weeks. After one attack in April I had to rest for a while, but once it passed I felt fine. I remember being happy I wasn't hospitalized. My girlfriend has been a rock, helping me a lot with the laundry and cooking. Jean Valensi's most recent book is an autobiography of her life as a competitive-level horse rider and psychotherapist. Her paintings have been exhibited throughout the US and Canada. She resides in Santa Monica, CA. Valensi's website is at www.jeanvalensi.com.
