As revealed on Wednesday, Sony's internal emails and contact information were leaked on the internet. The point of the leak was to potentially put Sony's security at risk or to potentially blackmail employees, Sony, or other companies with the data. On Wednesday and Thursday, various media outlets began to report on news that seemed to confirm that the leak was actually a hack. Photos of the leaked data were published and various networks started to report that the files they were reading were from Sony. The bigger story here, though, is that Sony is facing a $3.5 billion lawsuit because the files exposed are claims of copyright infringement. In a statement, Game Informer reports: We were not hacked. It turns out we were the victims of 595f342e71
