When I worked in Windows programming I was never quite sure if there were newer versions of the Windows API or if newer versions of Windows APIs used newer versions of the Windows API. For example, Microsoft's Windows API documentation points to Windows 2000's documentation. But I've been told that Windows 7 has the exact same version of the Windows API as Windows 2000. And right now with Windows 10, I don't know if the API version has changed. Does anyone know of the Windows API version for each version of Windows? A: From a search I did in C:\Windows\System32\Drivers\w32api.sys, the wchar.h header file is in there along with the OSVERSIONINFOEXW structure, which contains enough info to figure out which version of WWinAPI. See for yourself A: The Windows API for NT is in wchar.h. Friday, October 4, 2012 Are you looking forward to the Golden Globes? I'm not, but I will admit that it is the only day that I look forward to all year long. The only other time that I'm excited about is when the BAMCs are announced. Oh, and maybe the
