The aim of this study was to assess the intensity of painful symptoms within patients with rheumatoid arthritis (RA) and changes in their mandibular pain intensity over time. Three groups were defined: (1) 18 out of 60 patients with newly diagnosed RA and mandibular pain intensity of at least 4 on a visual analog scale (VAS); (2) 22 out of 66 RA patients with mandibular pain intensity of at least 4 VAS over the last 3 months; and (3) 27 healthy controls (CG). Pain intensity was assessed with the VAS (0-10). The McGill Pain Questionnaire (MPQ) was applied for the evaluation of pain descriptors. Pain localization was assessed by drawing mandibular contour landmarks (MCLs). We found a significant difference in the average mandibular pain intensity between RA patients with severe mandibular pain and RA patients with mild to moderate pain, and between RA patients with severe pain and CG (p Exceptional anti-inflammatory activity of acemannan isolated from Terminalia catappa.
