If you are that worried Google can identify you, then why did you even give it your SSN? The problem with giving your SSN to Google is simple, it is hackable by your bank for liability purposes and having a record of you SSN at a hackable bank is bad. This is what I do. I use a different email address for my online banking. I choose Bank X. I have 3 accounts on Bank X, 1 checking, 1 savings account, 1 CD account. They all have password requirements. No SSN necessary. I use my other email address for everything else. Same for me.Q: how do I get an IP address for a WiFi access point? I have an Access Point (AP) running Windows 7. I need to connect to it from a linux machine. In the Windows client, I can choose an IP address (static or DHCP), a subnet, gateway, and DNS. I can also look up the IP address of the DHCP server. How can I get these configuration values for my Linux machine? A: ifconfig should do it in Linux. A: Here is what I normally do: check if I have a public IP if not, use the DHCP to configure a public IP (if it is not used I will close it) then configure dhcp server on my Linux machine I leave a note on the wall saying "this is a dhcp server" so my former colleagues know

I just applied for a job today. I read the whole job posting and the whole application and sent it via email (without a resume, or anything), so they would have my personal data. A few days later, I got the email that I was the first applicant and, as the company is 3 months old, they would like me to go in for an interview. I told them that I had applied and sent the info, but they did not reply. I'm a bit worried that they won't keep me and it will be bad for my career, but I'm trying to keep calm. I tried to call the company, but no one picked up, the number is non-registered. Should I call again? Call again? Should I apply some other time? A: It's normal to not be able to get hold of the recruiter (or HR) to follow-up after receiving a candidate application. The best thing you can do is call the number back and ask for the person who is hiring. Since they haven't called you back yet, they're probably not so worried about hiring you that they can't talk. If they ask you why you didn't apply through the website, you can say that you sent in your application through email. If they say they didn't get a reply, then you can say that is because you didn't hear back yet. You should definitely reach out to the company when they

The upshot is that the only safe financial decisions now must be based on forecasts, which requires the traditional financial investment decisions that will be heavily influenced by the government. Some people choose to be very aggressive and miss out on the gains while others choose to be conservative and risk losing more than they gain. It could be done by emitting microwave radiation (non-ionizing or RADAR), sound waves (vibration or infrasonic), electromagnetic waves (c.8 and 10 GHz), but I only present here methods that work in the RF range, i.e. formers are "visible" and the latter are "invisible" to the naked eye. Detection is done by various electronic detectors, either passive or active or both, such as the most well known F.R.I.C.D. The use of different scientific data representation formats, like the Linear Algebra and Matrix Theory Format (LAM) is becoming increasingly important in numerical software. While the use of scientific formats could lead to more efficient and accurate computation, in some cases scientists such as chemists may find that the symbols often required are very difficult to understand. One must consider that in large-scale computation the symbols are generally replaced by the underlying numerical values, and in situations where there is no backward compatibility the programmers must invent a new mathematical notation. 1.74 0.98--3.11 Constant
