To determine the effect of pterygium surgery on tear film osmolarity. Twenty eyes of 20 patients who underwent pterygium surgery were prospectively studied. Schirmer and tear film osmolarity tests were performed preoperatively and at 1 and 4 weeks postoperatively. Mean preoperative Schirmer test score was 14.64 +/- 6.9mm. This decreased significantly at 1 week (11.05 +/- 5.1mm) and 4 weeks (9.80 +/- 5.1mm). Mean tear film osmolarity was 306.82 +/- 9.7mOsm/l preoperatively. A significant decrease was observed at 1 week (299.80 +/- 10.1mOsm/l), 4 weeks (295.60 +/- 13.3mOsm/l) and 8 weeks (286.95 +/- 7.7mOsm/l) after surgery. Tear film osmolarity decreased significantly after pterygium excision and no evidence of a clinically significant, early dry eye syndrome was encountered. than the comparison of split-inhibitor and double-inhibitor calculations within a single temperature (see Fig. \[fig:beta2\]). This can be understood by taking advantage of the detailed information provided by an exact calculation at the reference temperature. At higher temperatures, the exact calculation (and the available data from simulation) are still in the transition region between the re-entrant and the non-re-entrant phase. By contrast, the double-inhibitor calculation starts out as non-re-entrant and therefore has a discontinuity. We have also performed exact calculations for the free energy difference between non-re-entrant and re-entrant phases. In this case, we are unable to compare the different methods due to the fact that at all temperatures, the re-entrant solution is stable against splitting. In Fig. \[fig:beta3\], we compare the split-inhibitor approach to an exact calculation based on d0c515b9f4

Since antiquity, people from all over the world have come together for a few weeks of partying, usually over the course of a day or two. The newest addition to the Olympic portfolio is the Youth Olympic Games (YOG), which will be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina in October 2011. Click here for more on the Youth Olympic Games. The Youth Olympic Games have a different schedule from the older Games. They are aimed at 14- to 18-year-old athletes, but participation is open to any young person from all over the world. Teams must consist of two members of the same sex and can include athletes of any ability level. The games are divided into three age groups: U20, U17 and U15. Within these age groups, athletes will compete as individuals and also take part in group events. Youth Olympic athletes will compete in sporting events in athletics, archery, art gymnastics, badminton, basketball, boxing, canoeing, cycling, diving, equestrian, gymnastics, judo, kayaking, karate, sailing, shooting, surfing, swimming, table tennis, triathlon and wrestling. There will also be events for pairs and trios, in which the best three athletes from each country will participate. The highest-scoring athlete from each team will compete individually later in the week. While the numbers of participants from the Youth Olympic Games will be much lower than for the Senior Olympic Games, the future of the latter is unclear. It will depend on whether China is granted the right to host the 2016 Summer Olympic Games. If it is, then the Olympic family may have to deal with the fallout. While the Youth Olympics focus on fun,
