Given the number of similar questions people are asking on similar questions. Is there a way to confirm what I want to do is the right way to go? Right now I have two servers running Windows Server 2008 R2 Standard (both with all updates installed as of date). I have all MySQL databases installed on both servers. I have read that for this setup it should be "out of the box" right now. If I change the name from the MySQL server to the Server name (Server is the name of the Windows Server, MySQL is the name of the MySQL server) will I run into any more problems? Both of the servers are on the same network and both have the same hosts file. Thanks, Jared A: You can use NETBIOS or NTP to keep the server up to date and avoid server reboots, but using Windows Server Update Services (WSUS) is recommended as the automated update mechanism. As long as your two servers have a consistent view of the server's time (for example, they're both using an NTP server or they're both manually syncing), you won't have to run any additional checks or reboots. In addition, WSUS can also keep your databases up to date and give you a "single pane of glass" to administer updates across multiple operating systems, as well as be a centralized mechanism to publish updates to the network. They're fairly easy to set up, assuming you have the resources to manage them. Check out WU or WSUS in the Server 2008 installation media for instructions on how to install it. To elucidate the dynamics of short platelet distribution in diabetic rats, platelet distribution of two types of rat (SHR/N-cp/Le and WKY/NHsd) were analyzed under ether anesthesia using a fluorescence microscope equipped with epi- and exogenous-fluorescence systems. The short platelet distribution in these two rat models of diabetes was compared by using autologous platelets as the tracer. Short platelet distribution (Dp) of WKY/NHsd was significantly smaller than that of SHR/N-cp/Le, whereas platelet count (PC) in both rat models of diabetes was significantly higher than in the control group. Dp values of WKY/NHsd was significantly larger than that of SHR/N-cp/Le (P Q: How to make the two radio buttons behave the same for an auction script? EDIT: So I'm starting to understand this a little better. To make it easier to understand here is an example: `$(function(){ $('#answer_1').click(function(){ if(this.value=="high"){ $('#answer_2').prop('checked', true); $('#price').prop('checked', false); $('#starter_`
