Correlation of field potentials and iontophoretic signatures in mouse thalamus: the effect of iontophoretic drug application. Using field potential recordings, we investigated the effects of iontophoretic drug application on thalamic field potentials in both anaesthetised (urethane) and unanaesthetised (urethane plus alpha-chloralose) mice. Lidocaine, an antiepileptic and neuroprotective agent, at a clinically relevant dose (0.0325 mM), dose-dependently increased the amplitudes of all major positive and negative thalamic field potentials. Iontophoretic cocaine in unanaesthetised mice transiently increased the amplitudes of all the thalamic field potentials examined. These effects were dose-dependent, but, as is typical, the increase was of a greater magnitude for the N2 than the P3 waveform. A similar degree of activation was seen when the threshold current was changed (higher current required to initiate an action potential). The effect of lidocaine is likely due to its local concentration, presumably caused by the ability of the drug to pass the blood-brain barrier. The similar effect of iontophoretic cocaine is consistent with its ability to pass the blood-brain barrier. The increase seen is likely to be a local and direct action, and is consistent with a role for both endogenous and exogenous cocaine in the induction of acute brain injury. getName();?> Html->css('/css/upload.css', ['media' =>'screen']);?> Html->title($category->getName());?> getName();?>

Let's start. | | --- | --- | --- # Create a Layer In order to use pixel manipulation tools in Photoshop, you first need to create a layer. A layer represents the underlying pixels of an image. To create a layer, we need to select the image. Choose File | New. This will bring up the Create a New Layer dialog box. | LEARN BY DOING. Find out the basics of Photoshop, but also how to import and use formats such as JPEG, GIF, TIFF, and PSD. | | --- | --- | --- Creating a new layer Here, we are working with a photo of a lady and an image of a flower. Our goal is to create a layer that will add a graphic element to our lady image. 1. Click on the image of the lady to bring up the Rectangular Selection tool (R). In the Rectangular Selection tool Options bar, make sure that the "Create New Layer" option is selected, as shown in the following screenshot: | LEARN BY DOING. Now move the Rectangular Selection tool over to the flower image, creating a new layer over the flower. Make sure that the cursor is just below the top of the flower image.
