use electrostatic charging devices, for example an electrophotographic process such as the Xerox® 4600, are well known. In such devices, a photosensitive dielectric drum is uniformly charged with electrostatic charge, usually with a corona device. A laser beam scans across the drum to form a latent electrostatic image on the drum. The image is developed by contacting the drum with toner to create a visible image that is transferred to a sheet of paper. The paper is then passed through a fuser to fix the image to the
